Seven museums and sites in Philadelphia's historic district have agreed to donate all proceeds from admissions tickets bought on Saturday, March 19 to support the activities of UNICEF in Ukraine.

The sites and institutions, all located in the area general considered the birthplace of American democracy, include the African American Museum in Philadelphia, the Betsy Ross House, Carpenters' Hall, Franklin Square, Independence Visitor Center, the Museum of the American Revolution, and the National Constitution Center.

The institutions say they will also continue to accept donations for Ukrainian relief until the end of March.

UNICEF works in more than 190 countries and territories to assist children and is currently focusing efforts on displaced families from Ukraine.

The idea for collaborating with the historic sites originated with former mayor and governor Ed Rendell, who will participate in a press announcement Wednesday at Independence Visitor Center.

The Museum of the American Revolution joins several well-known sites and institutions in Philadelphia’s historic district, the birthplace of democracy, in partnership to support democratic ideals in Ukraine and around the world.

On March 19, the African American Museum in Philadelphia, the Betsy Ross House, Carpenters’ Hall, Franklin Square, Independence Visitor Center, the Museum of the American Revolution, and the National Constitution Center will donate 100 percent of all admissions proceeds from that day to UNICEF, to support its efforts to deliver aid to the hundreds of thousands of children and families suffering from the effects of the war in Ukraine.

Honorable Edward G. Rendell inspired the initiative. “These institutions tell the story of America’s fight to become free and create one of the world’s greatest democracies,” said Rendell about the fundraising initiative. “We all believe we should do whatever we can to support the Ukrainian peoples’ fight to preserve their own democracy.”

Some of Philadelphia's most historic institutions are joining together this weekend in a show of solidarity for Ukraine amid the ongoing Russian invasion.

The African American Museum, Constitution Center, Betsy Ross House, Carpenters' Hall, Independence Visitor's Center, and Museum of The American Revolution will donate 100% of Saturday's admission proceeds to UNICEF, which is providing aid to refugee children who have fled Ukraine.

Former Pennsylvania Gov. Ed Rendell, who put the group together, said the donations could reach $100,000, but that the show of support is more important.

"The American people have to send a message loud and clear that we value democracy here and abroad, and we will do everything we can to protect it," Rendell said. He added that the U.S. should be a leader in helping rebuild Ukraine after the war is over.

Seven historic sites in Philadelphia, including the Museum of the American Revolution, will donate their proceeds Saturday to UNICEF, which is providing humanitarian relief in Ukraine.

People can show solidarity with Ukraine on Saturday by visiting several historic sites and museums in Philadelphia.

Seven attractions in Old City will donate 100% of their proceeds to UNICEF, which is providing emergency assistance to families in Ukraine amid the Russian invasion.

The African American Museum, Carpenter's Hall, The Betsy Ross House, the Museum of the American Revolution, the National Constitution Center, Franklin Square and the Independence Visitor Center are all participating in the fundraiser.

Former Pennsylvania Gov. Ed Rendell helped organize the fundraiser, saying in part that he wants to encourage more people to provide support to Ukraine as its people face a humanitarian crisis.

"These institutions tell the story of America's fight to become free and create one of the world's greatest democracies," Rendell said. "We all believe we should do whatever we can to support the Ukrainian people's fight to preserve their own democracy."

The attractions will continue to collect donations throughout the month.

Everything was turning out just how Altovise Love-Craighead had hoped on Saturday afternoon at the National Constitution Center.

The weather was beautiful. The crowds were small, and her group of about 10 Philadelphia police officers and a dozen teenagers were eager to get inside the center to see the historic exhibits many of them had only heard about.

Then things got even better.

Love-Craighead was told at the front desk that all admission fees to the center on Saturday were to be donated to UNICEF's efforts to aid displaced children and families from Ukraine. Here it was, a perfect teachable moment for the young people in her group. So she ran with it.

That was exactly what Jennifer Nagle wanted to hear. The executive vice president of the Independence Visitor Center Corp., Nagle also had high hopes for the day. "We saw this as an important effort," she said. "We wanted to support and have others support these donations."

The one-day project was championed by former Mayor and Gov. Ed Rendell and others, and seven museums and sites in Philadelphia's historic district donated admission proceeds to UNICEF's Historic Philadelphia Ukraine Support effort.
